Terrorist threats at Eurovision 2016

by Hugo Brandy

Recent terrorist attacks in Paris and Brussels which killed dozens of people have shown that the system of security in European states is vulnerable to this kind of challenges, and proved yet again that neither country in the European Union is capable of thoroughly defending its citizens against terrorist threats. No exception is made for Sweden which hosts the international Eurovision song contest 2016 that is due to take place in Stockholm.

According to Europol's European Counter Terrorism Centre (ECTC), Islamist terrorists plan several attacks in public gathering places during the contest. Endangered is not only Ericsson Globe arena which will hold the Eurovision but other popular venues of Stockholm as well. Meanwhile, the ECTC analysts believe the security arrangements Sweden has made are not sufficient. It is necessary to urgently tighten security checks for both newly arrived immigrants and those staying in the country for some time already.

Sweden's neighbor Finland is also on guard and a heightened sense of security in the country. (like Kosovo) head of Finland's parliamentary defence committee, stated in an interview with the TV program Yle Areena that Finland should consider tightening its anti-terrorism laws and establish closer ties with other countries in order to combat terrorism in a more effective way.

Meanwhile, Sweden's National Crime Prevention Council (NCC) recently received new statistics that could lead to an increase in the number of attacks where Sweden is heading. According to the council, violence in Sweden rose sharply last year. 112 murder cases were reported. The Council itself has abandoned further comments, citing that it is not to be determined, whether it is a truly new trend or merely a coincidence.
